Jefferson College of Health Sciences Names Shomaker as Director of Humanities and Social Sciences Program

Jefferson College of Health Sciences (JCHS) has announced the appointment of Darrell K. Shomaker, M.A. as the new director of the college's humanities and social sciences program. Shomaker has taught bioethics and critical thinking courses at JCHS since 2007.

He lives in Pearisburg, Va. with his wife Hope, and two sons, Bryce and Elijah.

JCHS is a private higher education institution that focuses on providing healthcare education and is fully integrated with Carilion Clinic. Founded in 1914 as the Jefferson Hospital School of Nursing, JCHS now offers its approximately 1,000 students many opportunities to become part of the healthcare profession, serving communities from southwest Virginia to the Shenandoah Valley and beyond. The school's graduates are building healthier tomorrows for those in need every day across the country.
